House of Lavande's Ultimate Costume Party

By ZANDILE BLAY about 3 hours ago

The hundredth anniversary of Palm Beach? The fifth anniversary of antique jewelry boutique House of Lavande? And one private beach front property? For House of Lavande's owner, Tracy Smith, all this equaled a spectacular reason to celebrate. The lauded vintage jewelry connoisseur opened her home in Palm Beach's North End to a chic crowd of New Yorkers. Among the hand selected group of sixty guests were medalites Amanda Hearst, Becka Diamond, Andrew Bevan, Luigi Tadini and Mickey Boardman, as well as designer Chris Benz and stylist Mary Alice Stevenson.

We wish you could have been there too, but we took the liberty of attending on your behalf. While we struggled to interpret the dress code, which called for "modern vintage," others didn't. Guests were draped in everything from Michael Kors corduroy suits to vintage Vivienne Westwood. See how they complemented their wardrobe with Smith's expertly chosen House of Lavande pieces.

THIS graphic designer Julie Hirschfeld had a simple mission for fashion designer her Tokyo boutique for women, "The Spandex." The result is a store array of biker-inspired accessories that aren't just for the streets, but for the streets. Each bike is a work of art, from the simultaneously beautiful and functional to the more whimsical. In the store, on Tribeca, she surrounds the bikes with accessories. She and her design partners have had fun from Japan that comes over the ocean for every thing (for example, the bag from Makoto, $72.00). The bikes aren't everything, the store carries high-end accessories. The bike culture isn't an overnight phenomenon, which includes not only the bikes but the apparel, too.
